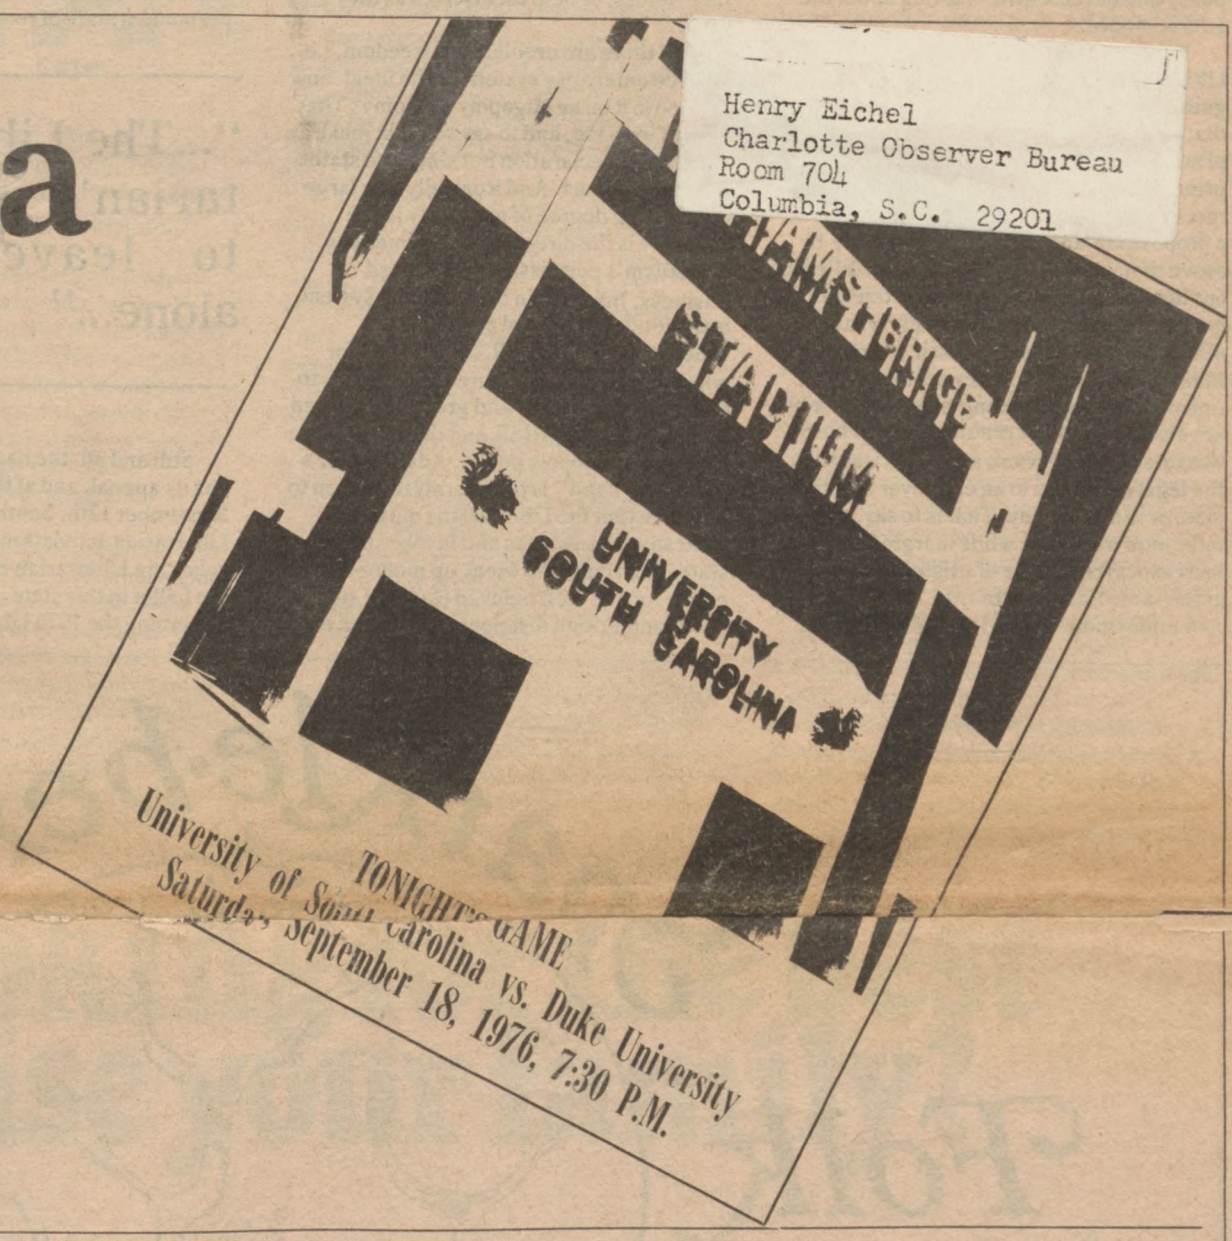
Carolina scores big!



By Jim Walser

As the final second wound off the quarter million dollar scoreboards at Williams-Brice Stadium last Saturday night, a clear majority of the 52,000 assembled fans were on their feet, applauding appreciatively, passionately at what they had witnessed.

"If they (the Gamecocks) beat Georgia next week, these people will be quitting their jobs to come out here and watch practice," one reporter suggested, only a little sarcastically, motioning to the adoring legions.

Although that comment might represent a slight exaggeration,the point is nonetheless well-taken. There are trails of evidence all over the place this fall that the "glory years" that have escaped lustful USC loyalists for so long may at last be here -- maybe even already in progress. The question of whether such success is going to exert a positive or negative force on the Columbia/South Carolina community remains to be answered, but the fact that it is coming, inexorably, can no longer be denied.

It is coming or here, quite simply, because the high costs of establishing a high-budget successful, on-going college football program have finally been met. The dues have been paid. For years, season ticket sales, game attendance, and assorted other revenue mines (The Gamecock Club, etc.) have been raided for the money necessary to build the needed accoutrements -- an athletic dorm, an expensively refurbished stadium with weight rooms, indoor practice fields, plush carpeting in the dressing room and an Astroturf playing surface. Season ticket sales this season were without parallel and by the end of November close to 400,000 home fans will have seen the Gamecocks play seven home games, with tickets (students' excepted) marketed for $8 each.

The final necessary act was to secure a coach who could field a competent team, and that was accomplished in December, 1974, when the reins were handed to Jim Carlen. His predecessor, Paul Dietzel, the fund-raiser who often flirted with the pose of a snake-oil salesman, labored for nine years to lay the foundation. But Dietzel, for all his ability to sell the idea of bowl trips and national prestige and recognition, could not provide the final fundamental ingredient and he was never to see the promised land that USC fans claim sight of now. Thus Carlen, who had already proved he could win in similar contexts at West Virginia and Texas Tech, was summoned by the Board to break down the final impediments. His work appears to be going well.

So as the crowd of well-wishers, reporters and assorted grid groupies gathered outside the USC dressing room, underneath the roaring crowd, to welcome the team off the field, the conversation was positively giddy with delight. Appalachian State, Georgia Tech and now Duke, 24-6, had been met and impressively conquered and the superlatives were in plentiful supply.

The POLITICAL ECONOMY by Ed Meadows

Libertarians convene

The Libertarians are neither Left nor Right. Their members run the gamut from staid businessmen mad about government red tape to Hell's Angels protesting motorcycle helmet regulations. Their flock includes latent Nazis lisping their black curses upon humanity, and longhaired young hippies against the dope laws. They include pretty young girls favoring nonviolent, non-interventionist foreign policy and old eccentrics ranting about the gold standard.

In fact, it is on the turf of the Libertarians that Left meets Right. For the guiding principle of the Libertarian Party is that anyone should be free to do anything he pleases, as long as it hurts no one else. The principle has much intellectual appeal. In theory, the nation was founded on just such a proposition and there is a rich history to prove that when the government meddles in our lives to uplift society, more often than not it botches the job, and merely creates new problems. Take the classic case of the minimum wage laws. They act to redistribute wages among those whose jobs are already the most renumerative. Those workers whose services are worth less than the legal minimum to an employer lose their jobs, or can't find any. That is to say, the minimum wage law, while marginally increasing the income of existing workers, at the same time insures that unemployment will be the highest among the young and unskilled -- precisely those most prone to get into trouble if they are left on the streets to fend for themselves. As a result Congress moves to create new job training programs which don't work (because most of the appropriated job training money goes to bureaucrats), and to beef up police forces to handle the vagaries of the idled young.

The Libertarian's instinct is to leave people alone, and to let business fare as well or poorly as they may. He would reserve for government only the task of policing those whose actions harm other citizens. The rest would be free to hurt themselves, or help themselves as they may fancy.

But there are problems. If freedom, i.e., the free enterprise system, is the ideal, how to impose it on an oligopoly economy? That is what we have, and to say so is not make an ideological declaration but simply to state an empirical fact. And ironically, the large dominating degree of monopoly in the economy is the direct result of American capitalism's permissiveness toward business. Inherent in the capitalist system is the tendency toward economic concentration. After all, some firms, for whatever reason, are more successful than others. They prosper and grow wealthy and squeeze out their rivals and then you have a degree of monopoly power. Adam Smith's "invisible hand" is thus paralyzed. Then to be consistent the Libertarians must contradict themselves and invoke strong state intervention to break up monopoly power, or see their beloved classical state of pure competition disappear, as indeed it has. Here is an irresolvable conflict which Libertarinas are loath to address.

Worse than that, less sophisticated Libertarians discredit their cause with misguided babble about how our paper money is worthless because it isn't "backed" by gold. They fail to see that money is whatever people will accept as money, and if the dollar is "backed" by anything, it is backed by the taxing power of the U.S. government, and specifically, the coercive powers of the American armed forces (the same "backing" which makes government securities the safest investment). If the economic policies of some Libertarians were enacted, our nation would wallow in a permanent state of recession.

> "...The Libertarian's instinct is to leave people alone..."

Still and all, the basic Libertarian dogma has its appeal, and at the Carolina Inn on September 12th, South Carolina's Libertarian activists met in convention, soliciting Libertarian candidates to run on the ballot in this state, and officially endorsing the 1976 Libertarian candidate for President, Roger L. MacBride. It was a jovial, informal meeting of political mavericks, chaired by Charles Blackwell, the large, mustachioed, cigar-smoking eclectic who runs the state Libertarian Party and who is now running for the Fifth District Congressional seat on the Libertarian ticket. Blackwell, who's campaigning on the slogan that "we demand the right to be left alone," has been everything from a dishwasher to an actor and an insurance salesman, and lived for five years in New York's Greenwich Village. He's probably the most philosophically inclined politician South Carolina has seen in a long time and he admits that he has no real desire to be a Congressman or a candidate, but is running "because someone has to." He says, "We just have to have an alternative." He adds that "the Democrats want to go 100 miles an hour towards socialism, while the Republicans only want to go 85 miles an hour. I don't want to make the trip."

'The Libertarinas in fact hope to field candidates in all the major state races, but the party is having its problems getting on the ballot. In classic Libertarian fashion, they complain that in order to get on the ballot in this state, it's necessary to deal with the rather cumbersome bureaucracies of no less than seven state and federal agencies, many of which enact rules and regulations specifically designed to make it difficult for alternative parties to obtain a place on the ballot.

The national Libertarian presidential campaign is having no less difficulty, yet

Work to do

This could be one of the rare times in this century when an election opened the way to major social change. The requirements are three: a President who has a vision of reform: a President and a Congress who can work together (presumably of the same party); and an era when major reforms are indicated. Such a combination happened in the early years of Woodrow Wilson, FDR, and the Jack Kennedy-Lyndon Johnson administration.

One of the conditions could be met if the voters in 1976 end the present stalemated split government in Washington. We have almost forgotten what it is to have a President and Congress of the same party. President Ford boasts of his vetoes -- the score was 56 last week. (Nixon vetoed only 43 bills in five-and-a-half years.)

The United States is patient under this stalemate, has almost learned to like it. It would throw any other country into anarchy.

"The institutional strucutre bequeathed to twentieth century America by the eighteenth century if more complex than that of any other democratic country in the world," writes James L. Sundquist in a new Brookings compendium: Setting National Priorities: The Next Ten Years.

Political adaption to technical change in the United States doesn't flow in an orderly stream; it comes jerkily, in pulses, more often than not depending on the accident of whether President and Congress have rapport.

"For 14 of the past 22 years, the executive and the legislature have confronted one another across not only an institutional but also a partisan political gulf," says Sundquist. What he means is that we had

Ford

Carter

Eisenhower for six of eight years with a Democratic Congress, and Nixon-Ford for eight years with a Democratic Congress and only one interval, 1960-68, with one party responsibility.

It is universally taken for granted here that the new Congress is going to be Democratic; will it continue to funciton with President Ford who delights in vetoing its proposals and who has taken virtually no domestic initiative of his own, or will it be working with a President of its own party? In short, will it give Jimmy Carter an opportunity to change things if he can and wants to?

Rival Presidents and Congress can cooperate, of course: Truman fashioned the Marshall Plan with the hated Republican 80th Congress but that was in time of crisis; Ike got on well enough with three Democratic Congresses largely because he didn't want to do anything anyway and because the nation was catching its breath after the war. But things generally are more complicated. There have been glorious spurts of reform and modernization; what is extraordinary is how brief the intervals are.

Woodrow Wilson caught up with a generation of lethargy; his first term enacted the Federal Reserve System, the revolutionary Underwood Tariff, regulation of big business (Clayton Antitrust, Federal Trade Commission, banking laws); he got an eight-hour day on railways, excluded child labor products from interstate commerce, poured out federal aid to highways, put farm agents in every rural county, overrode states rights and directed millions to vocational and agricultural education. It was a bracing period of social catch-up before World War I.

Roosevelt's New Deal, of course, was the second episode. Most of it came in a great leap. The country was in terrible shape and ready for change. Poor Hoover was making statements in 1932 that sound very much like those today.

"This campaign is more than a contest between two men," Hoover said in his windup campaign speech. "It is more than a contest between parties. It is a contest between two philosophies of government... You cannot extend the mastery of government over the daily life of a people without somewhere making it master of people's souls and thoughts."

How similar that is to Mr. Ford's favorite (and irrefutable) warning that a government strong enough to give a nation everything it wants is strong enough to take away everything it has! No one can deny it. It is Mr. Ford's protest at being jolted ahead too fast.

The second great legislative spurt in this century was the New Deal. In a kind of conclusive burst it gave the country TVA (Hoover had vetoed the Muscle Shoals bill); the Social Security Act; the National Labor Relations Board (Wagner Act); legislation putting federal support under the banks, security markets, the farms, and all the rest. Three things were implicit -- the legislation preserved the capitalistic economy; it was inevitable; it followed the American tradition. Many of the new ideas were old stuff in Europe and Canada. FDR helped America overcome an immense legislative lag and was, of course, reviled all the way.

The third big spurt of this century was the Kennedy-Johnson initial period -- the Civil Rights Act, Peace Corps, Economic Opportunity Act, floor under poverty, and all the rest. Kennedy was the first to use a budget deficit purposely to cure a slump and gave the nation the longest, strongest expansion in modern times. Congress and White House were of the same party. As happens under our strange divided system strewn with its vetoes, (committees, House, Senate and White House) all the circumstances have to be just right for major forward movement, and then it comes spasmodically.

What's the chance of anything like that happening now? One requirement would be, of course, to have a President and Congress of the same party, which means electing Jimmy Carter, which, in this ticket-splitting era, is by no means certain despite the polls.

The next question is, are changes needed? The answer is, the times cry for them! Welfare is a holy mess; the tax system aches for reform; every other country has governmental registration of voters (the lack of which is one reason for the disgracefully low American voter turnout); cities are going downhill; hand gun registration shouts for enactment; the growing poverty gap is alarming; 40 percent teenage black unemployment in the ghettoes means trouble ... You fill out the list.

There's one other point. In that rare concatenation of political circumstances, a new President, work to be done, a united government -- could Jimmy Carter do it? I don't know. Like you, I'll be watching the debate this week.

The politics of sominex

It is little wonder that a recent national survey shows that 70 percent of the people eligible to vote in the November election will probably elect not to do so. At a juncture when most elections are just getting cranked up, this one already promises to be a real snore with each candidate making it his main business to keep from going home with his foot in his mouth.

If it's not bad enough that we have to be subjected to Carter and Ford, those masters of the artful dodge, we will also have to put up with, over the next six weeks, appearances by not only the vice presidential candidates, but by the candidates' wives and children. Such was the case last Thursday when Susan Ford came to Columbia to open the new S. C. headquarters for the Ford for President Committee.

Presidential children are oftentimes thrust into rolls in which they are obviously uncomfortable and try as they may to pull it off, it doesn't always work out. Maybe it was "jet lag" or "I've done this too many times before", but Susan Ford looked totally unenthused about her appearance here on behalf of her father.

Maybe a hundred people, many of them media representatives, showed up at the new, nearly completed Five Points Building to hear Susan talk for less than a minute about how much she liked South Carolina (especially its beaches where she has spent many of her vacations) and how important a role, in her estimation, it will play in the November election. "You work for my father and he'll work for you," she said.

Along with Susan at the brief 20-minute ceremony were a couple of South Carolina Goppers, notably Governor Jim Edwards and long-time party faithful Drake Edens, who served as master of ceremonies, of a sort, in place of Sen. Strom Thurmond (important senatorial duties kept him away) and state Republican Chairman Dan Ross (away in Washington on business). Also absent was Ford's main spokesman in the state, mayor John Bourne of Charleston whose wife was reportedly ill.

Edens managed to point out at least twice that state Goppers were solid behind Ford, which automatically makes one wonder how true the denials to a question nobody asked were. "And," he said, "you can tell your father that there's not a shadow of a doubt that the tide is turning in South Carolina," and added, "and if it's not, it will be soon."

Rosalynn Carter in Columbia recently: is this the new politics?

Governor Jim, introduced by Edens as the one worth waiting for the 100 years it took the Republicans to elect a governor, told Susan that he and her father had a lot in common in that they had both been "thrown into office" -- and that somehow that made them more dedicated. Edwards also babbled something about a Ford administration not "sending our young people off to war to reduce unemployment," suggesting by implication at least that a Carter administration would. None of the local media bothered to pick up on the statement.

But this was neither the time nor the place for controversy and local Republicans wanted to relish the idea that they were getting some mileage out of the fact that the president's daughter was here in the state. Not to mention that the "event" gave the local media people something to do and a way to use all of their costly equipment.

Susan remained silent and apparently bored during the ceremony, and afterwards spent about ten minutes, mingling with the crowd and facing reporters asking the same old tired questions and getting the same old mundane answers. And if the public ceremony was a drag, we shudder to think what it must have been like for Susan sitting around a table with the local Goppers later on at a luncheon given by Governor and Mrs. Edwards.

Perhaps a statement Susan made Saturday in New York City is indicative of why she seemed so out of sort here. When asked what she thought about the city, Susan stonily replied that "New York is just like any other city. Campaigning is campaigning." If Susan was bored in New York City, it's no wonder that she seemed less than enthused about her appearance in Columbia.

It's hardly amazing that the voters in this country are so turned off this election when politics has become nothing more than a series of appearances by the candidate or others representing the candidate. It is little more than a standoff between these people and the media, the former not bothering to say anything and the latter not bothering to ask.

The media people manage to get front page stories out of these events that have about as much news value as a cat caught in a tree, and so they are happy. Why bother to point out that the presidential election is nothing more than a public relations extravaganza, when these campaign events translate into footage or column inches.

It would be interesting to see what would happen if the media refused to play along with these public relations games, stopped bothering to cover events like Susan Ford opening a campaign headquarters. But we all know that this is never going to happen. Why, editors and reports would have to start thinking up some ideas for some substantive stories if not for these non-news affairs.

The candidates will keep campaigning and the media will keep on reporting it and people will keep on turning to "Family Affair" on "Mary Worth".

Why is it that even the campaigners find the campaign trail boring? Who knows but indications are that 70 percent of the voters agree.

USC wins...

"That is the best game I've ever seen Carolina play." That unabashed conclusion was reached by Columbia real estate baron/poet/USC Board member Mike Mungo, Carolina Class of '50, who has monitored and contributed in his own immodest millionaire's way to the athletic maturation process here. Because he is a businessman, Mungo likes to see things work efficiently, and USC's game had left him impressed. "It's amazing the way they can get someone hurt (like quarterback Ron Bass this night) and send in someone else who does a great job (freshman Steve Swinehart in this case). There's a smooth transition. As far as playing all aspects of the game, this is the best Carolina team I've seen."

Quarterback emeritus Jeff Grantz, now a Carolina "graduate assistant", hurried by on his way to the dressing room as Mungo spoke. Mungo eyed him, and quickly moved over to give him a congratulatory bear hug.

Ah, Success.

Compared to the excitement which swirls around them, the immediate football family -- the players and coaches -- keep their elation in victory subdued.

The cue for that mind-set, of course, is Carlen, forever the stoic figure on the sideline. He paces a bit during the games, but for the most part he is stationary, intent, arms folded across his chest, a set of earphones atop his head which connect one ear with the defensive coach and one ear with the offensive coach stationed upstairs. Whatever transpires on the field, positive or adverse, Carlen's expression rarely changes. He is "businesslike" in everything he does -- from his short, precisely choreographed practice sessions to his machine gun question and answer sessions with the press.

But after Saturday night's win over Duke (a team that defeated Tennessee in Knoxville the week prior to arriving here), even Carlen was wearing a smile as he walked from locker to locker in the dressing room, patting assorted behinds and saluting his players on a game well played.

Inside the garnet and black dressing room, the size of which puts most facilities that house professional athletes to shame, there were more smiles, but little of the kind of gung-ho cheerleading and hell-raising that Dietzel liked to see.

Assistant coaches checked on the players who were their responsibility, extending congratulations where such tidings were in order. In one cubicle, a frowning Ron Bass, victimized by another injury in the last moments of the first half, told a reporter as he headed for the training room and the doctors, "I could have gone back in if they had needed me to."

Next door, the freshman Swinehart was trying to explain his success to a horde of reporters who recognized an instant celebrity when they saw one.

More than Swinehart's story, however, the reasons for USC's success against Duke -- and for three wins in three games -- lies with a rejuvenated, aggressive defensive team that stopped Georgia Tech's wishbone cold and treated Duke's pro-set very much the same way.

Carlen: new horizons?

Only last season the USC defense was giving up yardage almost as fast as one of the country's leading offenses, led by Grantz, could accumulate it. But now, in Carlen's second season, the defense has been bouyed by support from freshmen and sophomores and not only has ceased to be a debit, but is actually an asset. Against Duke, second team freshman Tim Singleton had an interception, and second team ends John Dantonio and Roger Woolbright, played effectively in place of seniors Scott Blackman and Russ Manzari.

"We jump around a lot on defense so that the other side won't know where we are," Carlen said the other day, in trying to assess the tactics.

Head defensive coach Richard Bell, who labored with Carlen at Texas Tech and West Virginia, offered more specific answers in the dressing room. "Basically, it's three things. First, the staff understands the players better after being here a year, we know their capabilities and we're able to use them better. Second, the kids understand us and where there was uncertainty a year ago. Third, we're tackling the ball carriers better."

Poor tackling habits were the first thing that Carlen cited upon his arrival after he looked at USC game films in January, 1975. He continued to point to that problem through the deluge last season, but it is a difficulty which Bell seems to feel is over.

"We convinced the kids that a game is often won or loss on the basis of a few yards. Last year we were letting people run through our tackles, right through our arms. But it hasn't happened so much this year -- at least not yet, said Bell.

Bell, Carlen and the players, if not all of the fans, realize that it's a long, tortuous season. The immediate problem is Georgia, a team that defeated Clemson, 41-0, last Saturday, and a team that Carlen feels should be ranked in the Top Five (they're seventh right now).

"They've got a bunch of agressive players, good athletes," said Bell, who must design a defense this week to shut off or control the Georgia option, an offense which killed Clemson. "They key to our success on defense is keeping everyone healthy. Injuries hurt us at the end of last season and we lost games (to N. C. State and Appalachian) that we might could have won with all of our defensive starters."

If Bell can keep his players healthy, the remaining schedule which includes Baylor, Notre Dame, and Mississippi may not be as overbearing as it appeared before the season. A record similiar to last year's 7-4 season, possibly even the first eight-win season in the school's history are not beyond reason. And if not this season, there's always next year.

Across the tunnel, Duke coach Mike McGee was solemnly answering a few questions. "They (USC) are tremendously improved on defense. The only thing we could do on them was run up the middle and they even stopped that when they had to."

Duke is a name rich in college football history, a school that helped pioneer big-time college football in the South along with the Universities of Tennessee and Georgia and Alabama. But Duke's lure to young athletes these days is no longer so seductive. There is no Astroturf on the ground at ramshackle Wallace Wade Stadium. The crowds that gather there are small by comparison to the Alabamas, Floridas and Georgias. There are fewer alumni, and not all of them feel that high-budget college football is the best philosophical commitment for universities to make in the 1970's.

Still, there are a few upsets of Tennessee and the Blue Devils can still compete in the Atlantic Coast Conference. But national championships, bowl games and widespread recognition are not likely to come Duke's way again.

"Yeah, they are doing alright here," McGee acknowledged grudgingly. "Good team, good place to play, good coaches. Things are going to get better."

For Carolina fans, the long wait may finally be over.

Withered fruit

Robin and Marian is such a great movie idea that it's hard to see how the filmmakers could have blown it: Sean Connery -- probably the finest actor ever to come out of the action genre -- as Robin Hood, Audrey Hepburn brought back from her nine year retirement to play Maid Marian, location photography by the brilliant David Watkin, a director, Richard Lester, with a good eye for realistic details, a supporting cast that includes such considerable actors as Robert Shaw, Nicol Williamson, Richard Harris, and Ian Holme.

Furthermore, the movie had the strength of a wonderfully evocative primary source; indeed, I've got to admit that I, along I'm sure with most of those who devoured the stories as children, am a sucker for anything concerning Robin Hood. This universally appealing fantasy is almost a celebration of innocence. There are villains in the tales, but no genuine evil; Robin is a rogue who fights for the right. And who can resist this idea of running off into the woods for a natural life of freedom and adventure? Robin, while no fool, is what the 18th century romantics would call a savage innocent. He's Adam with Sherwood as his Eden. In fact, the stories seem to represent an almost fairy tale period in the history of our forebears -- redolent as they are of Merry Olde England, lutes playing Greensleaves, Chaucer characters, Falstaffian camaraderie, quite simply what critic Pauline Kael has called in a different connection (Peter Brook's "The Beggar's Opera"), "the fresh, sweet breath of England."

So how could anyone have botched this combination of Robin Hood, Connery Hepburn? Probably any hack wouldn't have, but screenwriter James Goldman (with some help from Lester) most definitely has. Goldman's primary problem is that he has pretensions to making a Statement about Robin Hood -- a reductio ad absurdum in itself. His one none too spectacular idea as a writer is to take famous figures out of history and expose their stigmata so they seem as much klutzes ans neurotics as you or I. In "The Lion in Winter," this idea worked, at least when I saw it here on stage, because the extravagant guignol of having Henry II as a tyrannical, beshrewed monster and his sons, John and Richard the Lionhearted as overbred morons, was a clever deflating of the pompous traditions of most historical plays.

> "...what's amazing is that, despite the script, Connery and Hepburn do manage to kindle a spark in their scenes together..."

But while Goldman obviously has more respect for Robin than he had for Henry, the result is the deletion of most of the anachronistic gags and aphorisms that redeemed "The Lion" and a sudden, rather ponderous seriousness about his little idea. Here we have Robin as the legendary hero in decline. The movie -- which opens and closes with shots of withered fruit -- is set twenty-years later, after Robin and John have returned from Richard the Lionhearted's interminable wars. Of course, nothing is as it once was: the Sheriff (Robert Shaw) is a dour fellow who mulls around in an existential funk, saying things like "I'm almost sorry he's come back" or "he's a little bit in love with death" (Goldman, quite obviously, is a little bit in love with the purple cliches of camp melodramas). Kings Richard and John are more darkly Prufrockian: Richard (Richard Harris) is a sadistic killer freighted with some heavy ironies (lines like, "clever fellow, Death is"). John (Ian Holme) can barely find enough time away from his twelve-year old child bride for his brief scene -- showing the film at its sniggery worst.

Nor does Goldman bring much more life to Robin and Marian -- the withered fruit themselves. Many of their dialogue exchanges are a flat, sotto voce series of monosyllables and pauses -- as though they were uttering Pinteresque profundities (things aren't helped any by Lester's characteristically inflectionless and resolutely unsentimental dialogue direction). Goldman, like his brother William, seems to go in heavily for characters who adopt poses, and so we even have a drudge idea copped from brother William's "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," a scene just before the battle where Marian tells Robin, "I'll do everything for you but mourn."

But what's amazing is that, despite the script, Connery and Hepburn do manage to kindle a spark in their scenes together. Connery, now that he's dropped his tongue-in-cheek spy routine, is probably the perfect choice to play bluff, natural heros; indeed, it's that charismatic virility that seems to be his greatest power as an actor (and that Boorman saw in him in "Zardoz"). His Robin is almost childlike in his simplicity, yet unlike earlier, lesser actors in the part -- Errol Flynn, for example -- he comes closer to the role's primeval roots. Flynn could certainly master the suave sword-fighting repartee, but take him out of the all-indoors of a studio exterior and he would be awkwardly out of place. Connery, in Watkin's sun-streaked glades and rolling hills, is beautifully at home.

And what a relief Audrey Hepburn is from the mask-like prettiness of so many current model-actresses. Her beauty seems already to be cloaked in the mist of legend, yet it's accessible. She's never far from the kooky comedienne that enlivened so many of the comedies of the fifties and sixties. Together they seem a casting inspiration -- very different and thus completing each other, creating a total and almost irresistable effect.

There's so much potential here that it's infuriating that all Goldman and Lester could think to have the characters do was some interminable swordfights. I thought when Robin and John rode off to Sherwood in the distance to a swoop of John Barry's music, that the film was going to take off, but that's just where Goldman runs out of steam. He apparently has little interest in the narrative beauty of the original tales or in their message. If Robin Hood is about anything, it's the beauty of innocence, yet Goldman the literalist is trying to unveil the scabby realism beneath even this most ingenuous of dreams. He's actually trying to debunk Robin Hood in the name of truth, to show that that innocence was phony to begin with. He's like the kid who, having discovered there's no Santa Claus, has to go around telling everybody about it.

"Robin and Marian" has one supremely beautiful moment, which is from the legend. The lovers are dying in a small room of the abby where she had retired after Robin left for the wars. In a monologue where Goldman, for once, transcends himself, she explains why she has decided to die with him ("I love you more than fields that I have planted with my hands...I love you more than God"), whereupon Robin fires an arrow through the window and asks that they be buried where it falls in Sherwood. The shaft flicks past the camera and seems to simply keep going -- into the infinity of the sky.

It's a moment of pure poetry, the sort of moment with which the film should have abounded. So how ironic, or tragic, it is that now that we have the actors, the settings, the resources to create truly convincing adventure fantasies (and what medium is more adept at fantasy?), the filmmakers must deny their delight, must put the distance of literary conceits between themselves and the material. "Robin and Marian" is indeed a kind of withered fruit, but it's the spirit underlying this film that is decayed.

EXCITING SICILY

People who get a boot out of worldly places and pleasures can have an out-of-this-world time when they set foot on Sicily, set in the warm Mediterranean beyond the "toe" of the Italian "boot."

No far from the ski slopes on Mount Etna in Sicily has risen a resort hotel with heated indoor and outdoor swimming pools, saunas, a solarium and a gymnasium. Because it's a Holiday Inn, reservations can be made by calling any Inn.

From skiing to swimming to sunning, to saunaing Sicily is a scintillating spot to stop.

The folly of 'Dolly'

Among those curious phenomena known as Broadway musicals, probably none is curioser than "Hello Dolly!" Consider it's history: It began as an obscure German stock company play of the nineteenth century called "Einen Jux Will Is Sich Machen"; this work was then parodied by Thornton Wilder in his 1937 "The Merchant of Yonkers"; Wilder in turn rewrote his own play as a starring vehicle for Ruth Gordon in 1954 called "The Matchmaker"; "The Matchmaker" was then made into a film and, in 1963, a Broadway musical starring Carol Channing that cracked "My Fair Lady's" record as the longest-running musical ever; during this run it went through several permutations including a Japanese tour with Mary Martin and an all-black version starring Pearl Bailey and Cab Calloway (I saw a road production with Dorothy Lamour, no less). Finally, by 1970, too much theatrical inbreeding produced a monster: Daryl F. Zanuck's movie version left 20th Century Fox $25 million poorer and was so overproduced that it actually succeeded in turning the remarkably sympathetic Barbra Streisand into a grotesque caricature of herself.

"Dolly!'s" story is dramatic and would make great material for a backstage musical in itself: how a modest little comedy snowballed into one of the hottest theatrical properties in history, made its face known to the public through daily doses of pop culture ("Hello, Lyndon!," "Hello, Barry!," "Hello, Hardees!"), was beloved and performed by innumerable amateur theatrical organizations across the country, and was at heart nothing more than a tawdry little tart.

For what, in fact, is the secret of "Dolly!'s" durability? Certainly the play, "The Matchmaker," has its charms. Wilder lightly parodied the contrivances of his source (and in a parody, isn't the lightness of touch everything?) as a comic counterpoint to his ideas about love and youth. The story of Dolly Levi, irrepressable turn-of-the-century matchmaker out to land Yonkers merchant Horace Vandergelder is almost in the background to the "subplot" about the two clerks who light out for a spree in New York City. The play has a narrative, and characters, that work, at least on their own terms.

But there's no denying that when adapter Michael Stewart tried to further hybridize this play into a Broadway musical comedy -- that is, to squeeze in the necessary songs, dances, and production numbers, allow the audience time to buy drinks during intermission, and still get them out of the theatre by 11 -- the antique plot began to fray at the edges and what he wound up with was a mess. "Dolly!," the musical, is clumsily structured, has too many characters (two of whom, Ambrose and Ermengarde, barely put in an appearance), sketchily develops those it has, spends an interminable amount of time on hackneyed theatrics like Dolly's big entrance, and is built around the dubious merits of Jerry Herman's songs and, of course, the theoretical appeal of its lead actress. The few good moments in Stewart's book are left over from Wilder, but unlike most musicals, which bear some relationship at least in tone to their source material ("My Fair Lady" is a brilliant example of this), here the original gets swallowed up in the passing show. In fact, the musical is almost totally, cynically a creature of Broadway: that is, inflate an ordinary play to the scale of what a new TV show calls The Big Event, showcase a name actress, provide lots of hummable tunes that will multiply the promotional effect that a title ballad is supposed to give to almost any movie. No wonder Zanuck went ape over this property; it's a triumph of press agentry -- the sort of producer's idea of entertainment that would hit a Hollywood mogul right where he lives.

Frankly, the last thing I wanted to see was yet another version of "Hello, Dolly!" -- to hear about Barnaby's stuffed whale and see that hat shop scene with the hiding under the table, to anticipate whether Cornelius would indeed kiss a girl. It's not just all that show-biz hype; the play doesn't wear well. Surely only one dose of all that sugary Saroyan niceness is enough to last one for a good, long while. But under the circumstances, Workshop Theatre's production must be rated as not bad. Director Jimmy E. Quick hardly has lightness of touch, but at lest he doesn't take himself too seriously. He provides a rough, farcical energy to the scenes with Vandergelder and some whimsical touches, such as a Wagnerian rhinemaiden who pops up in the big 14th Street parade number. There was even a nicely lyrical feeling to one of the play's few quiet moments -- Nancy Robertson as Irene Molloy singing "Ribbons Down My Back."

The performances, too, varied from adequate to fairly good. Gene McKay with his barrel-like build was a comic presence -- if not a particularly polished actor--as Vandergelder. Ms. Robertson made a pretty Irene Molloy.nd Pam Irby a suitably hysterical Minnie Fay. Somewhat less satisafactory was Randall Browning as Cornelius -- particularly since this middle-aged clerk looked as though he had yet to make it out of high school.

As for Bette Harring, her Dolly pointed up one of the essential weaknesses of the musical: since everything is built around the central role, this actress must have a personality to the scale of the setting. Ms. Herring certainly looked the part and gave good readings in what sounded to be a mimicking of Carol Channing's voice, but her Dolly simply wasn't convincing as the object of all that fuss. Maybe it was her rather weak singing voice or maybe opening night jitters, but Herring seemed to lack that blithe, self-confident relish in the role that is so necessary to its success.

Finally, probably the weakest aspect to the production was the choreography -- which varied from banal and mechannical to downright strange. The little ballet of the waiters in the Harmonia Gardens had them swordfighting with shishkabobs, knocking each other down like dominoes, and running around in what must be vaguely intended as comic confusion.This business went on for about five minutes, producing in me at least a severe case of the fidgets, and probably the best thing you can say about it is that Gene Kelly could do little more with this idiotic sequence in the movie version. Indeed, it says something about Pam Bailey's choreography that one flick of Robert Bullock Jr.'s leg conveys more natural dancing talent than the entire chorus. Undoubtedly the dancing highlight of the show was when Bullock (he played George M. in Workshop's summer production and is here cast as Barnaby) was allowed to cut loose in a wild waltz during the hat shop scene.

All in all, it was a competent, handsomely mounted production, but that still doesn't answer the basic question which is...why? Why has Workshop -- an organization whose hallmark is its intimate scale -- done this play rather than, say, "The Matchmaker" itself, which would have been far more appropriate to its resources? Why do big musicals at all since there are two other theatrical organizations in town all too ready to handle that task?

The obvious answer is money, since Workshop needs the ticket sales and support that a big show could bring in in order to pay for its proposed new building. But maybe its just the glamor of being involved in a play so popular and famous. And when you come right down to it, Workshop has provided what is a reasonable facsimile of the Broadway experience. If you've ever sat in the back of one of those enormous Times Square palaces and listened to the voices, most of which have the same "trained" timbre, garbled through loudspeakers or some barely audible, looked at the rickety sets and the frequently cliche-ridden stagings, you know that your ticket to Workshop will have bought you a fairly accurate translations of one of those big, famous musicals, of an overly-commercialized and atrophying theatrical institution. Workshop has what looks to be an unusually good season this year, but "Hello Dolly!" is hardly an auspicious beginning.

has managed to gather the signatures to get on the ballot in California, New York, and 26 other states. They expect to be on the ballot in 36 states by next month, according to Linda Webb, a national party worker from Washington headquarters who came to the Columbia convention. Webb said the Libertarian Party is now on the ballot in more states than any other alternative party, more than Eugene McCarthy or Lester Maddox have.

As for the national media, the Libertarians will run 12 five-minute spots on network television, the next one appearing September 31 after "Charlie's Angels" on ABC, if your curious. Webb also said McCarthy has insisted that the Libertarians take part in a 90-minute nationally-televised debate between McCarthy and Maddox -- a debate proposed by the League of Women Voters.

Such an anomaly is the Libertarian Party! The same party that advocates sound repeal of laws against victimless crimes is the party that will picket the Bureau of Printing and Engraving to protest the printing of paper money when the party holds its national convention in Washington this month. Whatever the Libertarian Party may be, it is surely the most interesting political party now extant in the nation.

Showdown over Darlington

To The Editor:

I am writing this to you in response to your front page story titled, "Showdown at Darlington". First, to your reporter Douglas Wray Williams I would say, a journalist you may be, a music critic, never. I object to your caustic remark about the high school band that played for Jimmy Carter on his arrival at the Florence Airport. When you state that the band played, "off-key", I wonder if you can distinguish on-key when you heard it?

For your information that high school band is the Wilson High School Tiger's Band. It is under the able and professional direction of Mr. Leon Harvey. Mr. Harvey takes kids that have never held a musical instrument in their hand before and with hard work, patience and understanding, makes fine musicians out of them. I also want you to know that the band had been back from vacation for less than one week when they played.

So, to all members of the Wilson High School Band, their director Mr. Harvey and the thousands of Tiger fans, we say, Right on Tigers -- on-key. To Mr. Williams, get a pitch-pipe.

Sincerely,
Jordan D. Young

Anti-Columbia

To The Editors:

I have long admired your Ed Meadows and am thrilled to hear someone speak up on the subject of Columbia mediocrity; not to mention South Carolina. Columbia was too much. I had to leave.

After being shafted by incompetent, lazy and probably dishonest government employees of S. C., while trying desparately to survive as a freelance artist; I finally just gave up. It was the last bloody straw.

The whole story might make an interesting article and I would like to nail several individuals. Let me know if you are interested.)

Columbia has Osceola and James Dickey going for it, in my opinion. The latter will probably vacate the place eventually and maybe you guys should relocate before Columbia turns to a pillar of salt. If I could work miracles it most surely would. Again, my congratulations to Ed Meadows.

CORRECTION

In a story concerning House clerk Sylvia Risher ["Godmother of the S. C. House"] published September 10 in Osceola, it was incorrectly inferred that Columbia attorney Bobby Kneece represented Risher in a hearing concerning a dispute with a former husband. Although Kneece did represent Risher later [in July], he was not the attorney of record in February, 1973. We apologize for the error.

CINEMA

ATLANTIC I THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"Crypt of Dark Secrets," a mystery to us, followed by the high mileage "Truck Turner." R for both with the former playing at 3:50, 6:40, and 9:35, the latter at 2:15, 5:05, and 8.

ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

The ever popular "Misty Beetoven" followed by "Abner." X. Shows from 1:15 p.m.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 252-8011

"Mahogany" and "Lady Sings the Blues." Three and a half hours of Diana Ross for fans. She's better in her first role, "Lady," than in the overglamorized "Mahogany," but both are mostly black retreads of white Hollywood formulas. "Lady" at 2:30 and 7; "Mahogany" plays at 12:30, 5, and 9:30.

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Gus." Mule plays football. Disney, starring Tim Conway and Don Knotts. G. 1:30, 3:15, 5, 6:45, and 8:30 with a probable change during the week.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"The Way We Were." Barbra Streisand singing the title ballad creates a certain magic that somehow lingers throughout this slushy and contrived romance about a Jewish ugly duckling who falls hard for a WASP-ish Golden Boy, and carries on a stormy relationship with him from the thirties through the fifties. Made in the midst of the nostalgia craze, the historical backgrounds have little to do with the actual facts, of course; they're just a classy addition to the decor. Robert Redford the shallow paragon. PG. 1, 3:05, 5:10, 7:20, and 9:30.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"It Seemed Like a Good Idea at the Time" has a plot so complicated we can't find out what it is, but with Anthony Newley and Stephanie Powers starring in this comedy, you're taking your chances. PG, but not recommended for children. 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10, and 9.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"The Way We Were." The Redford-Streisand romance plays here as well. Call the theatre for the feature times.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 MAin Street, 257-5212

"The Duchess and the Dirtwater Fox." "The Great Scout" 's success has brought back this supposedly similar comedy starring George Segal and Goldie Hawn. PG. 1:10, 3:10, 5:10, 7:10, and 9:10.

Barbra Streisand

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"The Producers." Zero Mostel and Gene Wilder are going to get together a Broadway show so bad that they can cash in by overbankrolling the disaster; trouble is, their creation is so bad it's good. A tired plot for Mel Brooks' first film but some classically zany moments including the musical itself -- "Springtime for Hitler." Something of a cult classic. With Kenneth Mars. 1:15, 3:15, 5:15, 7, and 9.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Three Days of the Condor." On the run from a murderous CIA, Robert Redford seeks refuge with Faye Dunaway and gets more than he bargained for. Crassly capitalizing off of the post-Watergate paranoia, but a well-made thriller by Sydney Pollock. With Max von Sydow, Cliff Robertson. R. 1, 3, 5:05, 7:10, and 9:20.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square Downtown, 254-6731

"Robin and Marian." With Sean Connery as Robin Hood at the close of the legend and Audrey Hepburn as his rediscovered Maid Marian, this adventure story should have been irresistible, but scripter James Goldman ("The Lion in Winter") has so overloaded the action with cheap ironies, stagy, pseudoliterarydialogue, and some interminable swordfights that the film, for the most part, idiotically blows the opportunities that are so obvious. Still, the location photography by David Watkin is gorgeous and Connery and Hepburn create some poignant moments on their own. With Robert Shaw, Richard Harris, Ian Holm, and Nicol Williamson. Directed by Richard Lester. PG. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1227 Main Street, 256-1950

"Tunnelvision." Sleazy revue showing what television might be like in 1985. An obvious target for a film that has no qualms about being obvious. With (very briefly) Chevy Chase, Larraine Newman, and lots of sick gags. 2:30, 4:15, 6, 7:45, and 9:30. R.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 MAin Street, 254-5800

"Jaws." The big moneymaker comes in for a week. 2:30, 4:40, 6:50, and 9.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 254-7960

"Moving Violation." Yet another car chase. 1:10, 3:10, 5:10, 7:10, and 9:10.

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"The Great Scout and Cathouse Thursday." Some deftly directed moments and nicely exaggerated performances in this Western farce about political corruption, bawdy houses, venereal disease, adultery, etc. Lee Marvin, Strother Martin, Oliver Reed, Elizabeth Ashley, Kay Lenz, and Robert Culp star. PG. 3, 5, 7, and 9 with the matinees dropping during the week.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With the Sea." There's little left of Yukio Mishima's spare, poetic fable about a sailor who meets a tragic fate when he deserts the sea for the land and a widow who lives there. Nevertheless, what you do get is rather soothing: Sarah Miles and Kris Kristofferson make love in the best of taste, Douglas Slocombe's camera dwells on atmospheric seascapes and pensive closeups, the music is demurely romantic; it's a schlock art movie -- a kind of Muzak for the eyes. Rated R. 3:15, 5:15, 7:15, and 9:15.

(Please note: due to late changes in the theatres' schedules, actual times and movies may differ from those listed here. You are advised to call the theatre to confirm this information.)

CLASSES

The South Carolina State Library will conduct a film workshop for public and state institutional librarians on September 15th and 16th at the Wade Hampton Hotel in Columbia. The workshop is designed to familiarize librarians with the films available for circulation from the State Library and procedures for obtaining these movies for showing. For further information contact the State Library at 758-3181.

A 15 hour "Teaching English as a Second Other Language" Workshop will be held Sept. 23-25 in Cayce for community volunteers who would like to tutor immigrants and other non-English speaking residents in South Carolina. The South Carolina Literacy Association and the Greater Columbia Literacy Council are co-sponsoring the workshop which will be held at Tremont Motor Inn at 111 Knox Abbot Drive in Cayce and will require the purchase of a text and set of illustrations for a total of $9; there are no other fees. To register, call Mrs. Charles Shealy, 252-1187 or 794-1545. Reservations are limited.

The Small Business Administration and the Wil Lou Gray Opportunity School will condcut a special seminar, "Women in Business," at the S.C. Opportunity School, West Columbia on Thursday, October 7th. The seminar will provide general legal and financial information to those women already in business or those planning to start a new business. There is no charge, but space will be limited so make your reservation as soon as possible by contacting Mr. Wendell I. Dixon, Wil Lou Gray Opportunity School, W. Campus Road, W. Columbia, S.C.29169

Workshops in fair fight training and sexual enhancement will be offered at the USC Psychological Service Center beginning in mid-October. The fair fight session will be designed to help married couples fight in a positive, constructive way, while the sexual enhancement workshops will aid couples in learning to improve their sex lives by, for example, learning to communicate better. Persons interested in the Workshops should contact the Center at 777-4864. An initial interview will be scheduled in which the couples can learn more about the workshops. The sessions will meet one evening a week for four weeks, and there is a $60 deposit which will be refunded to couples who complete all aspects of the program.

Short Courses on topics ranging from ballet to chrocheting and from stamp collecting to belly dancing are being offered at the University of South Carolina this fall. The courses begin on September 23 and don't require formal admission to the University. For more information contact the Division of Continuing Education at 777-3808.

Planned Parenthood of Central South Carolina has announced a series of informal discussions on female sexuality to be held for men only. The talks will be led by a male counselor and will deal with such topics as female sexual response, health care, and birth control. Place is the Planned Parenthood clinic in Middleburg Office Park off of Forest Drive; time will be Tuesdays at 7 p.m. For more information call 256-4908.

THEATRE

The new Hiers Dinner Theatre will be presenting Bill Manhoff's "The Owl and the Pussycat" as its second production of the season. The play will star Harold Stockton and Sandi Shackleford, and will open September 24th at 8:30 p.m. to play on successive Friday and Saturday nights for four weeks. A gourmet buffet supper is served along with the entertainment and will commence at 7 p.m. For reservations call 254-0064 between 8:30 and 4:30 p.m. Tickets are $10 each.
